MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telephone Conversation with President Francois
Mitterrand of France (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
President Mitterrand
Interpreter: Alec Toumayan
Notetaker: Adrian Basora, NSC

DATE, TIME August 26, 1989, 10:33 - 10:45 a.m. EDT
AND PLACE: Kennebunkport, Maine

The President opened by saying he was in Kennebunkport and had thought about President Mitterrand. (U)

President Mitterrand said Kennebunkport brought back pleasant memories. (U)

The President said he wanted President Mitterrand to know that he understood what Mitterrand was doing on Lebanon and that Mitterrand had the President's strong support. (S)

President Mitterrand said he had taken good note of the President's statement and appreciated it very much; it contributed to the French position. President Mitterrand stressed that the French position was not an aggressive one. France was prepared for the very worst while hoping for the very best. President Mitterrand asked if the President had any suggestions. (S)

The President said he was very concerned about what more could be done. He agreed a ceasefire was needed and that the pressure should be kept on Assad and Aoun. Obviously there also had to be internal reforms and the withdrawal of foreign forces. (S)

President Mitterrand said that, as simple as it may sound, the first step is to extend the ceasefire. That is a must before the indispensable diplomatic approaches can be effectively made. These should be carried out through the exercise of pressure by the United States, the Soviet Union, and the Arab countries on Syria. (S)

The President agreed and said that France had influence with the Tripartite Group. Their efforts had hit a stumbling block and they should be gotten back into the game. (S)

President Mitterrand agreed and added that it was also necessary to push the Christians behind Aoun toward institutional reforms; these are the key to more peaceful relations with the Muslims. (S)

The President asked whether Mitterrand had much influence with Aoun; he did not think the United States had much. (S)

President Mitterrand said that France was pushing institutional reform with Aoun as much as it could. There could be no solution unless this was achieved first. It was absolutely basic to buy time and that meant to extend the ceasefire. (S)

The President agreed and added that some Muslims had been critical of recent French moves. But the US agreed and understood what France had to do. (S)

President Mitterrand said that the Muslims had a very complex mind set and were skilled at using language and playing with words; they have made up a French thesis that is not the French position, it is their own propaganda. (S)

The President expressed frustration with the hostage situation and the lack of progress on returning the body of Colonel Higgins. The US did not seem to be making headway with Iran. (S)

President Mitterrand said he fully understood, but felt that France and the US should stay the course as long as possible and work to keep the guns silent. (S)

The President agreed and said the frustration would continue. (S)

The President then turned the subject to Poland, saying he was reminded of their earlier discussions in Maine and Paris. Things were moving faster than they had anticipated. (S)

President Mitterrand agreed and added that things had been going in the direction they had hoped. It was important to determine what Mazowiecki's position was. (S)

The President said that the only thing he wanted to suggest was that he and Mitterrand stay in contact with each other and with the Germans and the British on what to do next in Poland. Many US Congressmen would be coming back from trips to Warsaw and urging more money for Poland. He did not want the money to go down the drain. It was thus important to stay in touch among the Allies on how to treat Poland. He did not know whether France was considering more aid for Poland, but he wanted to be able to say that the US was in close touch with its Allies. France and the US were working toward solutions for Poland and it was important to stay in close touch. (S)

President Mitterrand replied that the President could count on him in that respect. He was speaking both as President of France and President of the European Community. He would make the President aware of any new initiatives. (S)

The President said he expected the new Polish Prime Minister might want to come to Washington and other capitals in the near future. It would be important to coordinate on this subject. (S)

President Mitterrand fully agreed that it would be necessary to consult and coordinate to the fullest. (S)

The President referred to their decision in Paris to put together the Concerted Action group. Perhaps Mazowiecki should be encouraged to meet first with the Concerted Action group before visiting capitals. (S)

President Mitterrand replied that this was the thing to do. (S)

The President commented that it had been nice to talk, and reiterated his respect for what Mitterrand was doing in Lebanon. (S)

President Mitterrand said he was touched that the President had called and very pleased to speak with him. He had fond memories of his stay in the house from which the President was calling, as well as of the people who lived in that house. He had received the President's letter about Panama and had prepared his reply. He was fully ready to state what needed to be stated, on record: that one can't tolerate drug traffickers and threats to democracy. The President should be receiving his reply very soon, and Mitterrand would avail himself of the first opportunity that arose to address the matter publicly himself. He would also call the President soon; this was a very good procedure between the two of them. (S)

The President hoped he had not interrupted an important meeting, and hoped Mitterrand was getting a vacation. (U)

President Mitterrand said he had gotten a little vacation, but not too much. He was making a speech in an hour and a half, but the President had not interrupted anything; on the contrary, it was good to talk to him. (U)

FROM: ROBERT D. BLACKWILL RB
SUBJECT: Presidential Correspondence

One particular Directorate recently drafted and cabled out a series of Presidential letters to world leaders concerning a situation. One such was sent, without the opportunity for comment or concurrence by this Directorate, to Dutch Prime Minister Lubbers, whom the President had just visited in the Hague. We are now seeing replies from European leaders to Presidential letters we never knew had been sent.

Kindly insure that future Presidential messages to European or Soviet leaders are cleared beforehand with this Directorate. We will be sure to do the same. Thanks.

MEMORANDUM FOR BRENT SCOWCROFT

THROUGH: ROBERT D. BLACKWILL RB
FROM: ROBERT L. HUTCHINGS RLH
SUBJECT: Presidential Letters to Congressional Leaders on Legislation for Poland and Hungary

The August 30 Deputies Committee Meeting agreed that Presidential letters to the majority and minority leaders of both houses, as well as to the Speaker of the House, would be useful in securing prompt Congressional action on legislation for Poland and Hungary. As Congress returns, it will also be important for the President to maintain the initiative in proposing positive responses to the latest dramatic changes in Poland.

At Tab I is a memorandum from you to the President forwarding for his signature five letters to Congressional leaders. They review the elements of legislation the Administration is submitting, present a broader view of how the President is seizing the historic moment in Eastern Europe, and call on Congress for prompt action on the legislation. The letter to Senator Dole also acknowledges his visit to Kennebunkport and subsequent letter to the President. The letters should be sent as soon as the legislative package is submitted. The State Department concurs in this approach.

Concurrences by: Ginny Lampley, Tim Deal, Nick Rostow } RLH
Ron Peterson for OMB (all in draft)

ACTION

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: BRENT SCOWCROFT

SUBJECT: Letter to Congressional Leaders on Legislation for Poland and Hungary

Purpose

To seek prompt Congressional action on the Administration's legislative package for Poland and Hungary and seize the initiative in responding to the latest dramatic changes in Poland.

Background

The Administration is now prepared to forward its legislative proposal entitled the "Poland and Hungary Democracy Act of 1989," embracing the Enterprise Funds, Labor Initiative, and Environmental Initiative. Anticipating a flurry of Congressional activity on Poland, we believe that letters from you to Congressional leaders will be important -- not only to secure prompt action on the legislation, but also to keep the Administration out in front in initiating policy. At Tabs A through E are letters from you to the majority and minority leaders of both bodies, as well as to Speaker Foley, outlining the legislation and the Administration's intent and calling on Congressional leaders to act promptly. The letters are identical except for the opening paragraph of the Dole letter, which thanks him for his visit to Kennebunkport and subsequent letter, which we are forwarding separately.

RECOMMENDATION

That you sign the letters at Tabs A through E.

WASHINGTON

Dear Senator Dole:

Thank you for stopping by Kennebunkport to share thoughts on Poland. I also appreciate your letter of August 28 and the letter you delivered from Lech Walesa. I agree entirely that the latest dramatic events in Poland call for prompt US action. That is why I am writing you and other Congressional leaders to explain the legislation we are submitting and to seek your support in moving it forward as quickly as possible.

The Administration is forwarding a legislative proposal entitled the "Poland and Hungary Democracy Act of 1989." It would authorize $100 million for a Polish-American Enterprise Fund and $25 million for a Hungarian-American Enterprise Fund; a Labor Initiative for Poland and Hungary; and an Environmental Initiative for fighting air and water pollution in Krakow and establishing an Environmental Center in Budapest. This initiative could be added to pending legislation to authorize the Overseas Private Investment Corporation to operate in Poland and Hungary, and grant Poland tariff treatment under the Generalized System of Preferences.

During the August recess, the Administration has been working in consultation with Congressional staffs, on legislation for the Enterprise Funds. These would be managed and directed by the private sector, as befits initiatives aimed at capitalizing and invigorating Polish and Hungarian private enterprise. Although the authorizing legislation and grant agreements will ensure control over the uses to which the Funds can be put, I believe it important to create flexible mechanisms that can move quickly and to engage the vitality and creativity of the American private sector in this effort. In this way, the Funds can have an impact far beyond the initial outlay we propose.

The Labor Initiative is similarly important. Economic reform, which is central to our ability to help the Poles and Hungarians help themselves, will cause major dislocations of the work forces. These disruptions could fuel labor unrest at a time when the Polish and Hungarian governments need public support for their reform measures. Our initiative will provide help where it is needed: job retraining, improved labor mobility, and technical assistance.

Our Environmental Initiative targets two particularly important needs: combatting pollution in and around Krakow, the cultural heart of Poland, and creating an Environmental Center in Budapest to study ways of cleaning up the Danube. Funding for the Krakow initiative will be borne in part by the Department of Energy, which will reprogram $10 million in the coming fiscal year for retrofitting coal-fired plants in the Krakow area. It is also vitally important for the United States to support the view that economic and environmental progress must go hand in hand.

These measures, together with others we are taking in cooperation with our European allies, are part of a broad package of economic measures to support economic reform and democratic change in Poland and Hungary. We recognize that no amount of Western assistance can substitute for efforts the Polish and Hungarian governments have to undertake, and we must ensure that our support is conditioned on real progress toward economic reform. We also recognize that the United States cannot bear the entire burden of Western support. That is why we proposed at the Paris Economic Summit a mechanism for "Concerted Action" in support of democratic change in Poland and Hungary -- a proposal that is now reality through the "Group of 24" industrialized democracies convened under the auspices of the EC Commission. Along with other members of the "G-24," we have already met twice in Brussels, with another meeting scheduled for September 26.

You will appreciate that the historic changes in Poland over the past few weeks have lent a new urgency to our efforts. The new Polish government under Prime Minister Mazowiecki will face enormous difficulties in implementing economic and political reform at a time of sharply rising inflation, but it will also have historic opportunities to build a new Poland and in so doing help bring about a new Europe. There may be but a small window of opportunity for us, together with our European partners, to render quick and effective support. It is vitally important that we seize the historic moment.

The Administration announced last month that the United States will provide Poland with up to $50 million in food aid in the coming fiscal year, and we are working with other members of the G-24 to coordinate our emergency food assistance to cushion the impact of the decontrol of food prices. The Administration is also reviewing a full range of options for further economic assistance. And I should add that we may soon be seeing similarly dramatic changes in Hungary that will call for prompt reappraisal of our assistance measures.

Meanwhile, however, it is among my highest priorities to turn into reality the measures already announced for Poland and Hungary. I urge you to lend your support in moving this legislation forward, and I look forward to working with Congress toward that end.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Robert J. Dole

MEMORANDUM FOR JAMES W. CICCONI

FROM: G. PHILIP HUGHES

SUBJECT: Cooper Evans' Report on Opportunities for Increasing Agricultural Trade and Cooperation with the USSR

This is in response to your request for NSC staff comments on Cooper Evans' report to the President on U.S.-Soviet agricultural trade.

Evans' report rightly emphasizes the prospects for U.S. agriculture in an expanding economic relationship with the USSR. But his recommendations range far beyond the agricultural field. Trade opportunities are important but the relationship with the Soviet Union is unique and it is critical to balance national security and human rights concerns with the desire to see economic relations expand. Evans' proposal puts agriculture on a special plane and leaves the impression that the relationship as a whole has progressed further than, in fact, it has.

In the statement of purpose, Mr. Evans points out that the report was written in anticipation of an "increasing interest by the United States" in expanding agricultural trade with the USSR. He notes that Soviet demand for imported agricultural goods will remain high even if Soviet domestic reform efforts succeed. The problem for the Soviets is, of course, financing those imports. The perennial shortage of hard currency and the lack of tradeable goods make it unlikely that the Soviets could markedly increase agricultural imports from the U.S. regardless of Soviet desires or needs. Because of these inherent limitations on our export potential, Evans suggests that we give the Soviets greater access to our market, not only through MFN under a Jackson-Vanik waiver, but also by offering the Soviets a commitment in principle to increase exports from the USSR. The latter suggestion is unworkable: we can't guarantee any country a market in the U.S. -- even needy ones such as the CBI countries.

Mr. Evans also calls for other measures to increase agricultural trade with the USSR in advance of any action on Jackson-Vanik. For example, he recommends that the President give U.S. exporters the "green light" to trade with the USSR. Given the level of interest of traders and exporters in agricultural exports to the Soviet Union it is hard to imagine that they need further encouragement. The President has laid down conditions for the waiver of Jackson-Vanik and we should be careful not to undercut that initiative by suggesting ways to expand trade in the absence of MFN. The ball for expanded trade is in the Soviets' court. They have been slower than we expected in passing a respectable emigration law but we should not appear anxious to improve our commercial position in the absence of the reforms that we are seeking. Nonetheless, such a statement could be made so long as it is clear that we will not treat agriculture in isolation from other aspects of U.S.-Soviet relations.

Two other proposals cause greater concern. The suggestion to guarantee ruble convertibility on sales of U.S. agricultural products could involve massive subsidies to the USSR depending on the dollar/ruble rate used to calculate the final purchase price. At a minimum, it would put the USG in the position of having to guarantee ruble convertibility to the American exporter, which could have significant budgetary implications depending on fluctuations in what is an artificial, not market-based, ruble/dollar exchange rate. "Aid" proposals, such as credits for lend-lease obligations, or Evans' recommended use of EXIM and OPIC credits to support agricultural exports (assuming a Jackson-Vanik waiver) would be inconsistent with the President's statement at Texas A&M that trade and financial transactions with the USSR should take place on a normal commercial basis. The reaction on Capitol Hill to such proposals would be strongly negative given scarce resources for foreign assistance and governmental support of U.S. exports.

The discussion in the report of Jackson-Vanik is confused and would require substantial revision to reflect the precise legal requirements under the law and the conditions the President has already set forth publicly for waiving Jackson-Vanik. The proposal to seek legislation which would authorize the President to give the Soviet Union MFN treatment irrespective of the Jackson-Vanik requirements is particularly troublesome in that it would be seen by the Congress and interest groups as a way to gut Jackson-Vanik without getting anything in return. It would run counter to our general policy approach which is one of carefully calibrated response to specific Soviet reforms.

Mr. Evans does have some good ideas worth pursuing. The suggestion for establishing links between the developed U.S. and burgeoning Soviet agricultural cooperative sectors is especially noteworthy. Under this proposal, U.S. and Soviet agricultural cooperative members would hold a conference in the USSR to be followed by individual exchanges. Such a program would promote free enterprise by giving cooperative members information and contacts needed to get their cooperatives up and moving. It would also establish potential customers among cooperative members who would owe part of their success to these contacts. The report also presents other useful ideas for expanded cooperation such as a veterinary exchange program.

The President has made it quite clear, however, that although Soviet reforms are in our interest, perestroika will succeed or fail on its own merits without material assistance from us. Mr. Evans report is inconsistent with that message and contrary to our overall economic policy approach toward Moscow. Furthermore, his disclaimer at the beginning of the report that it reflects his views only is not credible given Mr. Evans' position as a Special Assistant to the President. The Congress, the press, and the American public would see it as a definitive statement of U.S. policy.

We would, therefore, strongly recommend against public release of the report in its present form. It should remain a confidential report and should not be forwarded to the President. If a decision is made to release the report in any form, we suggest that Mr. Evans work with the NSC staff and interested agencies to ensure that the report accurately reflects our policy priorities and the President's own statements on U.S.-Soviet relations.
