MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Meeting between POTUS and President Mitterrand

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Secretary Baker
Secretary Brady
General Scowcroft
Robert Zoellick (notetaker)

President Mitterrand
Minister Dumas
Hubert Vedrine, Presidential Assistant
Anne Lauvergeon, Presidential Assistant

DATE, TIME July 5, 1992
AND PLACE: Munich, Germany

President Bush: Thanks for coming over. Hope we can work out dates for a meeting at Camp David or some place else. Sorry for being less flexible than I would like about the exact date. (U)

President Mitterrand: No problem, we will work something out. (U)

President Bush: It's important that we meet. I don't want to see a disconnect between the United States and France. We may have differences. But it's better to talk about them, get them on the table. This is an interesting period in the United States. We're in a presidential year; some are saying the U.S. has done its part, and that it's time to come home. It's a mood right below the surface. We also are facing a sluggish recovery. This adds to feelings of people asking why we should spend money abroad. My view is that it's in our own interest to have our troops here in Europe. I also believe most Europeans want us here. But I'm not sure I fully understand the heartbeat of the French on this question. I think I understand it when you and I discuss this subject, but then problems arise. There is a broad feeling in our government that the French are ambivalent about the U.S. presence. (U)

Perhaps you have concluded we'll leave. For us to remain, we need to put our emphasis on NATO. We know of your historic differences with NATO. But that's one reason I was anxious to meet, so I hope you'll be frank about our existing problems on questions of security for Europe. We get different answers on the Franco-German Corps from the French and from the Germans.

~~SECRET~~

Declassify on: OADR

We also have had differences in the NACC. I need to know where you're coming from. France is important to the security of Europe and elsewhere. I don't want us to be ships passing in the night. (S)

President Mitterrand: Our position is simple. We are members of the Atlantic Alliance. There have been no serious circumstances where we have failed to meet our obligations. We're present at political meetings. The status was designed by de Gaulle because of our nuclear armament. We couldn't deal with your nuclear doctrine in the way you wish, to put our very physical existence at stake. But then again this is speaking as if the Soviet Union is still as it was. I don't see how you believe that we make things difficult. My impression is we have good relations with the U.S., although they seem to complain. We pay for the Atlantic Alliance. We don't want to dismantle it. Of course, we won't move into the integrated command. But we have good relations between military staffs. So where are the difficulties coming from? I understand that you regret that France is outside the integrated command. But this has no serious impacts. We've been living with this since 1966. In all serious circumstances, the French and the U.K. have been very close to the U.S. So, I don't understand why the question is asked. (S)

Since the collapse of the Soviet Union, I haven't understood the reasons why you're trying to give NATO a new content. At the time that the threat of war is receding, it seems you want NATO's mission to expand. Why is this? You never discussed it with us. What does the U.S. want more than it had before? Do you want a political role? That's difficult to give a military organization. If I have any qualifications, it's that. But I'm not seeking to be stubborn. If you're keen on some ideas, let's discuss them. I remember at Williamsburg, when Ronald Reagan submitted a text talking about Japan and the Atlantic Alliance as if they were the same thing. Not to me. So I disagreed. In the Middle East, you saw our position and support on Iraq. In North Africa, you see our position. But I feel alien to Tokyo ... Taiwan. If there's a problem, we should discuss it. What responsibilities do you want to give to a renovated NATO? It seems you're striving to make NATO the only place to discuss defense problems. But there are other places. I know of the U.S.'s anxiety. In Rome, you showed great understanding on the WEU. But then we thought your position became firmer, that you hardened. (S)

It seems that any military unit alongside NATO gives you worry, even if it's in harmony with NATO. You had the same reaction to the Franco-German Corps. I don't see how I could differ with Kohl. The Corps represents the most we can do. Its value is primarily political. For more than a century, France and Germany were enemies. Now we meet together in Munich. What incredible memories. There were mistakes before the war. We abandoned the Czechs. I have neither illusions, nor ambitions to make the Corps into a new army. What is done is done. It's difficult to take it further. Others will join, but not many, perhaps the Belgians, the Luxembourgers, the Italians. But if they don't, it is of no matter. The Corps illustrates the reconciliation between France and Germany. It is a duet that demonstrates strength and power. We're not asking for more. It is not to conquer foreign lands. We intend no offensive actions anywhere. (S)

I don't see U.S. troops leaving for a long time; I'll be long dead, so that's not my aim. There are, of course, elements that could undercut you: public opinion, the press, budget. For the next four years the President will be you, I won't hide my feelings, but your successor may not have the same policies. So we need an organization to ensure our own security. Not against NATO, but with NATO. Look for a single example to the contrary of what I'm saying. (S)

President Bush: If you felt because of pressures that we'd pull out I would understand. But I have to ask myself what does the Franco-German Corps do? I understand that it would shore up your friendship. But our problem is that more differences seem to be appearing. We thought we'd agreed on the definition of CSCE security. We thought that France believed the U.S. should remain. But the more differences we encounter, the more questions raised in our minds of whether the U.S. is wanted. I would understand it if you think that we are pulling out, returning to 1938. And that's the Catch 22 that's created: that theme plays on sentiments in the U.S. As long as I'm President, we will stay. How much of our differences -- in NACC, CSCE, with the Franco-German Corps -- are because you think we're going to pull out? (S)

President Mitterrand: We don't feel a need to say yes without consultations. When you define your broad strategy, you're the most powerful, (cites various recent examples) and we don't want to learn what you're doing by reading it in the press. Of course you've been kind to write about the things you're doing, but others may not be. (S)

President Bush: Take the case of Yugoslavia, we didn't push. We said let others proceed. (S)

President Mitterrand: I'm trying to explain my reasoning. On each problem, it seems possible for us to reconcile our differences. If the Franco-German Corps is of no particular use, how can it hurt? (S)

President Bush: We get different definitions of the Franco-German Corps. Let Secretary Baker say a word. (S)

President Mitterrand: Let's be precise. All armed forces of the Western allies will inevitably exist within NATO. France is not within the military integrated command, but our own strategy operates within NATO. We want distance between the integrated military. But this Corps is a small part of the German army, perhaps 35,000 men. You're giving very formalistic answers. I can't imagine the Franco-German Corps will engage in any action outside of NATO. It would have to be complementary. (§)

President Bush: We're not seeking to encourage antagonism. (U)

Secretary Baker: The key is in your words. If the Corps is indeed complementary, fine. We've supported the European security and defense identity. But what we're worried about is duplication. We respect the French view on the integrated military command. But German forces would normally have priority assignment to NATO. The Germans tell us that their forces in the Corps will, but the French tell us something different. (§)

President Mitterrand: I don't understand. The Franco-German Corp has no direct instrument without NATO agreement. How would it do so? For example, if there's a conflict with Russia. The Franco-German Corps is an embryo, it would take 25 years or longer for Europeans to develop their own security. The Corps is as far as I can expect to go. (§)

Secretary Baker: Our concern is that the embryo will grow into a rooster and be duplicative of NATO. If its role is not clear, it will undermine the United States' consensus for NATO. You mentioned a possible political role for NATO. Yes, that is what we want. NATO is not just a military alliance, but it's a political alliance and that has been demonstrated in the past. So the new roles and missions for NATO means the enhancement of its political role as well as strengthening its military role. We have no problem with the European defense identity if it complements NATO, but doesn't duplicate it. But when we ask Germans if their forces have first priority to NATO, the Germans say yes, but you say something different. (§)

President Mitterrand: But this is devoid of content. Even the question is odd. How can we be different from NATO? To do what, to go where? (Ø)

Secretary Baker: Go wherever the head of it goes. (U)

Minister Dumas: We saw an example in Yugoslavia. The U.S. didn't want to get involved. But Europe may be concerned. So we need flexible relations with NATO and a European view. Europeans need something to help deal with such situations without being incompatible with NATO. Look at the Gulf. The WEU forces complemented the U.S. But for the moment we're only discussing German and French forces. On doublehatting, some nations will say they would like to participate but all troops will be in the integrated command. That's no problem. They'll be allocated twice. (§)

President Mitterrand: I have seen that the Franco-German Corps seems to be worrying the U.S., why is this? (§)

President Bush: It sends signals to the U.S. that you believe we won't remain. (§)

President Mitterrand: It's not as clear as that. (U)

President Bush: It's clear to us. Congress says why should U.S. troops be in Europe? France has a new answer. We say NATO is a stabilizing force. Either you think we're leaving or that NATO is not important. It's fine to go march into Sarajevo. But the problem is if you think that the U.S. can't be counted on. (S)

President Mitterrand: It's impossible to compare this to the tremendous power of NATO, and I repeat we're part of NATO, we're one of two European countries with nuclear forces, small but enough to make a difference. This is not the same as all the forces with NATO. (S)

President Bush: I'm not being articulate on this. The signal is that we're not going to stay or that we're not wanted. (C)

President Mitterrand: Then what should we do? Leave the United States' military in charge of all decisions? (C)

Secretary Baker: No, establish true complementarity. Answer the questions about the Corps the same way as the Germans are answering them. You will develop it as a European defense identity to deal with problems that NATO won't. Where there's a conflict, it can be complementary, but not duplicative. (S)

President Mitterrand: Secretary Baker is the best spokesman of France's policy. (C)

President Bush: We have some CSCE problems. (S)

Secretary Baker: This is referring to the problem of NATO as a component of CSCE peacekeeping. We encountered great trench warfare in Oslo. Now we're repeating it in Helsinki. (S)

President Mitterrand: I'm not interested in that war. We're not going to return to trench warfare. Maybe it's possible for all of Europe to be in the same alliance, but I don't see how Bosnia and others would be a part of it. CSCE enabled us to join the former Soviet Union with Western Europe. I even had difficulty convening CSCE in 1989. But there was instability in that period. I held the conference in Paris. We were behind making CSCE a success. You were more concerned. I was all in favor of CSCE. If you can say they're all ready to join the alliance.... (C)

Secretary Baker: No, but all agree with the idea of a NATO peacekeeping force except France. (S)

President Mitterrand: Well, then we have the pleasure of an original position. Look at the heads in the former Soviet Union, they are all apparatchiks. They save their skin by becoming super nationalists. They're not the ones to give us lessons on loyalty to the alliance. (C)

Minister Dumas: We would like to agree to call on NATO or the WEU as needed. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: This is not a problem for us. (Ø)

Minister Dumas: But in some situations it may not be a good idea for NATO to intervene. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: This is not a big problem. We don't care much. What other forces are there than through NATO? (Ø)

President Bush: Put on your historian's hat. Do you believe the United States will be in Europe in ten years? (Ø)

President Mitterrand: Yes. I'm not sure about 50 years -- not because of the Europeans but because of the Americans. I understand the Franco-German business concerns you because of our different status in the alliance. But we all have constitutional differences. We can find a solution if we work on it. And we have no problems with the CSCE issue, I just find it amusing. (Ø)

President Bush: Our objective is to achieve stability. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: I have two worries: First, Russia has been rolled back from its achievements over three centuries. In some barracks or elsewhere, people will argue that Russia has been betrayed. They will feed on the discontent. This is not a probability, but I fear a coup even if through civilian leaders pandering to nationalism and for people seeking revenge. Second, I worry about Europe splitting up. We're going too far in splitting. This is counter to the historical trend. There are new states that never existed. Take for example, Byelarus, Kazakhstan, Moldova, Ossetia. There'll be wars. Specters are coming back. I'm not joking; I'm talking to the President of the United States, the most powerful country in the world. Watch Russia and Ukraine. That relationship will be of primary importance to Germany. Poland has always been a friend of France, but it's never been capable of governing itself. Do you think I have the illusion we could solve all this without you? (Ø)

President Bush: The best signal to all of them is a strong united Western alliance. It avoids a signal to the United States that throws doubt on us. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: Does it add suspicions on your part, with the press? (U)

President Bush: Don't feed the feeling in the U.S. I can contain it. Avoid a signal that sends the clock back to the '30s. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: We can't give up on our personal thoughts. The things we propose aren't all stupid. We know Europe well.

For example the Court of Arbitration. We set up one in the EC. It's a good system. Let me give you an example, through Yugoslavia. Once Yugoslavia started to break up the Germans wanted to recognize Slovenia and Croatia. I felt it was wrong to move quickly. We needed to define principles in law on the frontiers and minorities. But they rushed into unconditional recognition. A Court of Arbitration would have been useful in this circumstance. The minorities fear that they will be massacred. But we didn't succeed. We had a map. We were trying to determine which villages belonged to which groups. What I'm saying is not all French initiatives are bad. (S)

President Bush: I saluted you for your acts in Sarajevo. (U)

President Mitterrand: The idea was not to get negotiations started. We just wanted to open the airport. (U)

President Bush: It was very important symbolically. (U)

President Mitterrand: The plane had to land in Croatia. Tudjman wanted to have dinner with me. I said no. I'm not here to negotiate. Milosevic said don't land in Sarajevo it's too dangerous. I said I didn't want to ask the Serbian President for permission to land. (S)

President Bush: You stayed out of the political side, you stressed the humanitarian. (U)

Secretary Baker: It also sent a clear signal to the warring tribe that there's a price to be paid. (U)

President Bush: How was it received in France? (U)

President Mitterrand: Well, when I landed, a Serbian general there said that the international press was slandering the Serbs, but it's really the Moslems. I said how can they kill your men? Only because you're here. Why are you here? (S)

Coming back to CSCE, I don't see how there can be differences between the United States and France on where we want it to go. I think you're wrong on the Court of arbitration. (S)

Minister Dumas: The other problem is CSCE calling on NATO for peacekeeping. (S)

President Bush: Our difference isn't just one about the role of arbitration. It's the role of NATO. Everyone else agrees on this, but I know what's it like to be alone. Like me in Rio. (S)

President Mitterrand: Dumas says you want CSCE to call on NATO. We want the WEU to be available too. (S)

Secretary Baker: That's OK with us. The exact difference is that you want to make it difficult procedurally. (S)

President Mitterrand: I'm not legalistic to that degree. Let's talk about things that exist. NATO does, luckily. The WEU barely exists. CSCE will do what it wants. That's no problem. Can you accept the Badinter proposal? (Ø)

[Then there follows a discussion in which we tried to explain that we hoped to figure out a way to let Badinter proceed even if we could not agree with it. We also explained our directed mediation proposal and how it would be complementary.] (Ø)

President Bush: I stopped in Poland on the way here. Walesa is trying but things are very difficult. I said we'd convert $200 million from the stabilization fund to other uses. I hope you'll look at it. (Ø)

Anne Lauvergeon: The French shared 600 million on francs, we'd always planned to use it for Polish development projects. You have no problem with us. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: I'm very happy to do this. (U)

President Bush: I worry about Poland. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: Yes, there's disorder, there's chaos, there's not much political weight. They have a key role to play as a buffer between the Germans and the Slavs. Silesia and Pomerania are part of Poland now, but they were German. The Russians occupy part of Poland. (Ø)

President Bush: You're nice to say you'd see Baker on the Uruguay Round. We thought the European Community might come forward with some flexibility. But they were silent. So we didn't feel that the meeting was worth your time. We made two proposals. I just wanted to apologize for the lack of the meeting. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: It was better not to meet if there were going to be no change in position. (Ø)

President Bush: I know it's tough for you and us, but I think we're not far apart. (Ø)

President Mitterrand: I want GATT to be a success. It would stimulate the world economy. But we have big differences on agriculture. We've moved forward. The new agriculture policy is almost causing a peasant revolt. It goes in your direction on export subsidies. Exports will be cut at least 18 percent. It comes part of the way. We're ready to discuss the rest. We've fought on agricultural terms since 1985, but it's no longer the main issue. We have to focus on services and industry. (Ø)

President Bush: We understand. But too much of a departure from the Dunkel text will lead to a revolt in the United States and the Cairns group. (Ø)

Secretary Baker: I think we're a lot closer than the parties and the public realize. We also need an agreement on market access in services. Your actions on CAP reform make a solution possible. I know it's painful. But we need to incorporate your CAP reform proposals in a text. If we can guarantee the sanctity of income support payments to farmers, what could you do for us on export subsidies in volume terms? I think that there is an agreement to be made. (C)

Anne Lauvergeon: There's a big difference between 18 and 24 percent. (C)

Secretary Baker: We think we can satisfy you on internal supports and then you can meet us on export subsidies. Some of our people say that there should be no agreement without the other areas that we are still lacking, but we don't agree. An agriculture deal would be a big step. We're not sure where to deal. Delors and Andriessen need to consider and consult with each member. But if you, Kohl, and Major instruct them to look at the income supports, to make payments inviolate, and then look at what you can do for us in exports subsidies. It would codify your past reform policies. If you gave them that general instruction, I think we can reach an agreement. (C)

President Mitterrand: I think we can move in this direction. We can't agree here, but we can move in that direction. (C)

Let me summarize. On NATO, WEU and the Franco-German Corps, you discussed the different explanations between German and France. The Franco-German Corps should be able to fulfill its own missions, NATO need not intervene, but they should decide jointly. I'm not closed to discussing further along these lines. On CSCE, we are prepared for conciliatory formula on using NATO and the WEU. We're quite prepared to give the maximum flexibility to reach agreement. Finally, I would be grateful if you would examine the Court of Arbitration. (S)

President Bush: We will have a look. (U)

President Mitterrand: As for GATT, the new CAP reforms can bring views on farm products closer. But 18-24 percent is a big difference. What could you do that would be comparable? We also need a comprehensive agreement for GATT. (C)

Secretary Baker: I wonder if it's useful to try and get a clearer understanding on complementarity in a working text. (C)

President Mitterrand: I agree. (U)

President Bush: I think the EC has offered 20 percent on export subsidies. (C)

Meeting closed with various pleasantries. (U)

URGENT

As the House moves to consider the FREEDOM Support Act (H.R. 4547), I wanted to convey to you my strong backing for the bill and my hope that it will have the support of you and your colleagues.

I submitted the Administration's FREEDOM Support Act proposal in April and requested prompt Congressional action. On July 2, the Senate passed its version of the bill, S. 2532, by a bipartisan vote of 76 to 20. The Senate and House bills differ from the measure I proposed to Congress, but they contain most of the basic authorities which I requested. I hope that working together we can produce a Conference report that serves as a bipartisan basis for our assistance effort.

I am convinced that we now stand at a critical historical moment. Together with our allies, we have the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to help consolidate democracy and free markets in Russia, Ukraine, Armenia and other states and to turn former enemies into a permanent friends and partners. Most importantly, we have the chance not only to help the peoples of Russia and the new independent states escape the long nightmare of communism, but to secure for us and our children a future that is infinitely safer and more prosperous.

Six weeks ago, Russian President Yeltsin came to Washington. Together we defined a new era in our relations. In signing with me the Washington Charter, President Yeltsin made clear and unequivocal commitments to democracy, free markets and security cooperation that no Soviet leader could have possibly contemplated. After tough negotiations, we signed a historic nuclear arms reduction package that will achieve the greatest measure of security for the United States since the dawn of the nuclear age.

President Yeltsin also reaffirmed his determination to building a free market in Russia and pushing ahead with his program of radical economic reforms despite the tremendous hardships they are imposing on the population. Together, President Yeltsin and I established a new framework for U.S.-Russia trade and investment that will benefit our businesses and our workers for years to come. We prepared the way for vastly expanded American trade and investment by signing new Tax and Bilateral Investment Treaties that will help our firms enter the Russian market and by granting Most Favored Nation status to Russia.

We now are poised on the threshold of a new generation of peace with Russia -- a democratic and capitalist Russia. President Yeltsin has boldly and unambiguously committed his government to the values that all Americans hold dear: democracy, freedom, and free markets. He has agreed to eliminate the strategic weapons that have most threatened our people for a generation. And he has promised to uncover the darkest secrets of the communist past and help resolve our deep concerns about American MIAs, POWs, and the KAL 007 tragedy.

Now it is time for America to do its part to assist Russia, Ukraine, Armenia and the other new states to make the wrenching transition from tyranny to freedom. Together, the Administration and Congress must send the courageous peoples of Russia, Ukraine, Armenia, and others the clear message that we stand with them at this difficult hour as they struggle to implement real reform.

To those who say that America cannot afford to assist these democrats at a time of domestic difficulty, I respond that no such false choice exists. We can -- we must -- meet challenges at home and abroad.

The Freedom Support Act is not just another foreign aid bill. It is first and foremost an act of national self-interest, a direct investment in the political, economic, and security future of the American people. Having spent over $4.3 trillion to defend ourselves from Soviet totalitarianism during the Cold War, we can ill afford not to invest in democracy in Russia and Eurasia so that we can permanently reduce our defense burden. The resulting savings would be directly available for investment here at home. And by acting now to engage Russia and the new states, American firms, workers, and products will be well positioned to take advantage of this large and untapped market.

If we do not act now, we collectively will have failed to live up to the challenge -- and the strategic opportunity, perhaps the greatest this century -- that this new relationship gives us. Now it is time for the House to join the Senate and pass the Freedom Support Act and then to meet in conference and pass an act I can sign into law. Anything less would be irresponsible. To desert Russia, Ukraine, Armenia, and other new democracies at this time of need, would be a tragic mistake for which history will surely judge us harshly. I therefore urge your support for early passage of the Freedom Support Act.

Sincerely,

NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL

The Honorable George H.W. Bush
The White House
c/o Ms. Rose Zamari
The Residence
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

Thanks again for the opportunity of meeting with you yesterday at the UST festivities at Westchester airport. Given the arduous schedule that you follow, I was delighted to see how well you looked. Probably partially due to your training by "that greatest agate shooter of them all, Hector McBean Hart". (Your words, many years ago). Strange as it may seem, I still miss him.

Yesterday, I mentioned the possibility that a member of the Bush family might accompany one of our airlifts sometime in the near or far future. You'll recall that Jeb and George P. accompanied us to Armenia in January, 1989, and Marvin went to Nicaragua with us shortly thereafter. I think that both of these worked out extremely well from the standpoint of all concerned.

We have now flown 26 airlifts to the C.I.S., and 11 to Croatia. There will probably be more to these countries, as well as to other countries, during the next couple of months. Yesterday, I received an excellent fund-raising letter from your son, George, and I thought that perhaps he, too, despite his responsibilities in Washington, might be a logical candidate. These trips normally require approximately 72 hours, block-to-block.

Another thought, Mr. President, if I may: each year, on the first Saturday in October (October 3rd this year), AmeriCares gives a "bash" at that same UST hangar that you visited yesterday. About 40 of our volunteers glamorize that hangar, making it into a real "make believe ballroom", and normally there are approximately 600 to 700 attendees. It's informal, no black ties (or bikinis) and the speech making is limited. It's just one helluva good time for all. Right outside the hangar, we have a Boeing 727 positioned, which takes off generally about 10:00 P.M. for a foreign destination within 5 hours flying time. The plane carries approximately 25,000 pounds of medicines, plus about 50 passengers -- AmeriCares volunteer doctors, AmeriCares staffers and invited guests. In past years, we have flown to Haiti, Jamaica (after the hurricane), Guatemala and other nearby countries where AmeriCares has major operations. The passengers are generally met by the President of the Country, then tour hospitals, children's clinics etc., then a gala dinner in that country, followed by a return to Westchester, arriving back at the UST hangar by 8:00 P.M. on the following day (Sunday). It's been a wonderful experience for all concerned.

I'm wondering whether this year we might ask you and Barbara to be our "Honorees", or if you would prefer, Marilyn and Dan Quayle. Or, possibly, your son, George. Accepting the role of "Honorary Chairperson" does not presume attendance at the bash, although that obviously would be an enormous plus.

I am not unmindful of the fact that a date such as October 3rd during an election year is a pretty busy and hectic time for all members of the Bush Family; but there are obviously plusses from attendance at a festivity such as this, as well. Were the Honoree to come from Washington, flying to Westchester, a brief attendance at the dinner, and then back to Washington could be accomplished in 3 hours.

I cannot, in all candor, say that this is a "non-partisan" occasion. And while we don't shoot Liberal Democrats on sight, there normally are not many around to shoot!

I'd welcome your thoughts on this.

With affectionate greetings to you and Bar.

Yours,

MEMORANDUM FOR BRENT SCOWCROFT

THROUGH: DAVID C. GOMPERT
FROM: JANE E. HOLL
SUBJECT: Meeting with House Republican Research Committee
Task Force on the Balkan Crisis

A Congressional group, headed by Congresswoman Molinari, wants to discuss the Administration's handling of the Yugoslav crisis. Though they may seek answers to a range of questions regarding what we are or are not doing in this crisis. You may want to offer the following argument:

- If I may, I'd like to suggest that the central issue is really not a question of uncertain policy goals: We couldn't be clearer that aggression will not be rewarded and that the humanitarian suffering of this violence must be alleviated.
- It is not a question of doing nothing -- we are doing a lot.
- It is not a question of the U.S. providing leadership -- we have had a strong hand in developing the broad international approach to this crisis.
- The real issue is the use of force. But this is not an easy issue to resolve.
- At the one extreme, you could conduct air strikes against hostile forces surrounding the Sarajevo airport. But such strikes prove little and accomplish less. At the other extreme, you have an open-ended, large-scale commitment of military force, but to what end?
- Even if other countries were willing to join us in such a large-scale, long-term commitment -- which they are not -- you face the task of resolving a blood dispute between belligerents who have not tired of fighting.
- We're considering ways in which we might most usefully apply our resources, including military resources, to this crisis, and that is why we have focused our greatest attention on humanitarian assistance.
- As I have said, we are clear about our interests, we have done a lot, and we will continue to exercise leadership at critical junctures.

The following specific points may also be useful:

- Humanitarian Relief. Working through international relief organizations, the U.S. has provided over $53 million in aid assistance. We continue to work actively with the UNHCR and ICRC to bring aid where it is needed. The Sarajevo airlift has flown over 500 flights, averaging 200 MTons/day. The U.S. has been a prominent contributor to this effort.

- Sanctions. We led the effort to bring stiff sanctions against Serbia for its aggression. The sanctions are having an effect -- contributing to a nearly 20% decline in the Serbia/Montenegro economy. The NATO/WEU monitoring force in the Adriatic is a visible demonstration of our intent to keep the sanctions pressure on.
- Human Rights abuses and Concentration Camps. The U.S. has been a continual force in CSCE for action to document and help alleviate human rights abuses in the various regions of Serbia, in particular, Kosovo and Vojvodina. We have requested that an emergency extraordinary session of the UN Human Rights Commission be convened immediately to investigate charges concerning the unlawful detention and mistreatment of civilians and we intend to pursue this issue vigorously. [FYI: While we do have confirmation that detention camps exist, we cannot confirm that wholesale slaughter is going on. Nevertheless, we want these camps exposed, investigated and closed down.
- Diplomatic initiatives. We have again been at the forefront in denying Serbia and Montenegro's claim as the rightful successor of Yugoslavia. The widespread support of sanctions have also resulted in near-unanimous condemnation of the Serbian aggression against Bosnia.
- Use of Force. The U.S. is prepared to participate in a multilateral effort to facilitate humanitarian relief missions. As the President has stated, we would provide naval and air assets if such an operation were to become necessary. We would not, however, provide ground troops.

SUBJECT: Your Meeting with Armenian Vice President Gagik Arutyunyan on Wednesday, August 5

DECLASSIFIED

PER NSC WAIVER 1500 2021-02
By SS NARA, Date 12/30/25

Vice President Arutyunyan was recently relieved of his position as acting Prime Minister. He may raise such issues as U.S. agricultural credits, energy assistance, and the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

Negotiations on Nagorno-Karabakh. Negotiations of the Minsk Group ended in Rome on Tuesday. This was the first time that all sides involved in the dispute, including Nagorno-Karabakh Armenians, attended. The meetings, however, were frequently disrupted and generally limited to questions of procedure. The parties made no progress toward a compromise, or settlement, of the conflict, and no agreement was reached to deploy CSCE observers in the region. The next round of negotiations are scheduled for September.

Agricultural Credits. The USDA has completed a creditworthiness assessment of Armenia and concluded that it does not meet program requirements. USDA has agreed to request additional economic and budgetary data from Armenia and review its finding, although a different decision is highly unlikely. Armenia simply does not have the wherewithal to repay. We have asked USDA to consider the possibility of PL-480 funding for Armenia, but we are not in a position to say anything to the Armenians on this score yet.

Energy Assistance. In meetings with Assistant Secretary McAllister and Ambassador Armitage in late May, the Armenian Energy Minister requested U.S. assistance in meeting Armenia's fuel needs for the upcoming fall harvest. In response to the Minister's appeal, D/CISA undertook to canvass our Coordinating Committee partners (EC and Japan) on the possibility of providing the requested fuel. The U.S. agreed to provide transportation if the EC and Japan donated fuel oil and generators. Our allies all responded in the negative; their key concern is that they do not see the fuel as humanitarian aid, but as contributing to Yerevan's ability to continue the NK conflict. Ambassador

Armitage has asked the Japanese to take another look at reconsidering their initial negative decision.

Relations with Turkey. In your discussion with Arutyunyan, you may also want to emphasize our support for Ter-Petrosyan's efforts to normalize relations with Turkey. We are urging Armenia and Turkey to establish information offices in each other's countries as a first step toward full diplomatic relations.

Yerevan Chancery. You may want to tell Arutyunyan we are pleased that the U.S. embassy in Yerevan has finally received a chancery building, and we are grateful for your efforts to make that happen.

Dear Bob,

Your testimony in support of the Freedom Support Act was right on target. This is the most important vote members of the House will cast in their lifetime. If democracy and freedom fail in Russia and the other former communist states, this will be a fatal blow to all we have fought for during the past 45 years. Rather than winning the Cold War, we will have lost it. Reactionary leaders will come back into power. The peace dividend will be down the drain. Instead of reducing the defense budget, we will have to increase it by billions of dollars. Thousands of nuclear weapons, which President Yeltsin is eliminating, will again be aimed at the United States. Aid to Russia and the other former communist states is an investment in peace and prosperity for the American people. Keep up the good work.

With warm regards,

Sincerely,

The Honorable Robert Strauss

SUBJECT: Travel to Lithuania and Latvia

In May the NSC had no objection to my proposed travel to Lithuania and Latvia on the basis of invitations from their respective Ministers of Health and Social Welfare. Other scheduling demands, however, compelled me to postpone that trip.

Both nations have renewed the invitations. The suggested time period is from the last week of August into the first week of September. Since I remain disposed to accept their invitations, I will view your earlier approval as consent for this trip as well, unless you have other concerns.

The reasons for the travel remain basically the same. The health care systems of these Baltic states have serious problems. But even the small amount of surplus equipment (and supplies, including old medical journals) that we can provide would make a positive difference. We have sent several modest shipments to the region which have been met with very effusive expressions of appreciation. This assistance has particularly been noted in the Lithuanian- and Latvian-American press, and the Baltic-American communities continue to lend full support to this effort.

In addition to meeting with a range of government officials, I would also be available for whatever purposes our local diplomatic missions deem useful.

Dear Mr. Owen:

Thank you very much for your letter encouraging the President to continue pressing for the IMF replenishment. I also received your letter proposing the creation of a committee of U.S. businessmen to advise Administration officials on our assistance programs in Eastern Europe and the new, independent states of the former Soviet Union.

The President has made it abundantly clear to Congress that the $12 billion U.S. share of the IMF replenishment is a major Administration priority. As you know, it is a critical feature of the Freedom Support Act which the President has urged the Congressional leadership to pass.

Thank you for your proposal to stimulate effective private sector programs in the former USSR. We will look into your ideas and appreciate your advice.

Dear Brent,

You were kind enough to phone me a while back to say that the efforts of the Bretton Woods Committee in seeking approval of the IMF replenishment had made a difference. I hope, therefore, that you will not mind if I write to suggest that you could now make a difference in respect of this proposal.

The President did a great job a few weeks ago in proposing the IMF replenishment and other measures to help Russia. That's why we are considerably better off now than we were then.

But there is no way a measure as large and controversial as this one can get by with just one Presidential push. As the Washington Post pointed out in its June 15 lead editorial, the votes are there, but they can't be garnered without a clear sign that the President still thinks this is top priority. Republican members of Congress want this sign because they are sensitive to the President's priorities; Democratic members want it, as they did in President Reagan's administration, as protection against attack in this fall's election campaign for supporting the IMF.

There are lots of ways the President could give this signal, e.g., in a meeting with Congressional leaders, including Senator Leahy and Congressman Obey and the ranking minority members of their appropriation sub-committees. Without some such signal we will face a tough battle--at least in the House.

Sincerely,

Henry Owen
